Methodology

• Mixed-mode (live phone, email-to-web, and text-to-web) survey of Registered Voters in the City of Seattle

• Conducted March 5 – 14, 2024

• 700 completed interviews; effective margin of error: ±3.9 points

• Data weighted by key demographic variables to accurately reflect the Registered Voter population

• Where available, results are compared to the survey of Seattle Registered Voters, conducted Fall 2023

*Please note that due to rounding, some percentages may not add up to exactly 100%.
• The sample universe for The Index is All Registered Voters (ARV), not Likely Voters (LV), because the focus is on tracking attitudes over time, not on modeling and analyzing the opinion environment for a specific election.
  – The Registered Voter universe is younger, more progressive, more likely to be renters, more likely to be new to the city, and more likely to be people of color.

• Six-in-10 Seattle voters identify as Democrats, making them the primary driver of overall opinion on all survey questions.
Summary

• The Index held steady at 4.24 on a 0-to-10 scale (compared to 4.23 in the fall) as have most measures with a few notable exceptions:
  • Homelessness and public safety remain voters top concerns, but concerns about affordability are on the rise, with one-in-four voters now listing it as a top concern. There has been a similar increase in people saying they have considered leaving Seattle and the top reason these voters give for thinking about leaving is affordability.
  • Concern about police bias and misconduct is down and trust in the City Council on police reform has grown significantly but is still very low.
  • As voters continue to be concerned about their personal financial situation and about city taxes, the belief that the city already has enough money to address important priorities has grown.

• A majority of Seattleites remain optimistic about the future of this region and three-quarters say they are proud to call themselves Seattleites, mentioning the natural beauty and the environment as the best things about living in Seattle.
Summary

• On a number of questions, Seattle voters make it clear that they want the City to focus on the basics:
  • Nearly two-thirds (63%) say they are concerned about their personal financial situation and 6-in-10 think taxes are too high for the level of services the city provides.
  • Most voters do not believe the City has an effective plan to address fundamental issues like homelessness, affordability, and public safety.
  • Voters continue to distrust the city on spending, and most voters believe Seattle already has enough money to address important priorities.
  • By a 90% to 9% margin, voters agree that the City should “focus on the funding the basics like filling potholes, maintaining parks, and addressing public safety.”
  • By a 69% to 30% margin, voters say focus on maintaining the infrastructure we have rather than focusing on bold initiatives like more bike lanes and street redesigns and amenities.
  • By a 76% to 23% margin, voters say the City should work to offset the budget deficit by reducing non-critical spending while protecting vulnerable residents, rather than by raising taxes to maintain current spending levels.
Summary

• The actions voters think would have the most impact on improving quality of life ("a very significant impact") also reflect a voters’ desire to focus on basic responsibilities, including homelessness/encampments and a variety of public safety issues.

  • More than 8-in-10 Seattleites say helping local businesses deal with public safety concerns would improve quality of life in Seattle.

• Voter support for increased density – in their own neighborhood - remains strong and in a new question, six-in-ten Seattleites agree that more construction of retail and commercial spaces should be allowed in their neighborhood.

• Voters continue to recognize that downtown is central to the region’s economy, 80% agree they’re worried about downtown’s future, and only 14% are optimistic about downtown’s economic future. Safety is a key reason voters have concerns about Downtown, with only a third saying they would feel safe visiting at night. And safety related concerns are the top reason Seattleites say they aren’t visiting Downtown more often.

• A majority continue to say they feel less safe in their own neighborhoods compared to two years ago.
Quality of Life
Quality of Life: The Index

- The Index has stabilized in the past year.
- The Index aggregates the following quality of life survey questions:
  - Right Direction/Wrong Track
  - Quality of life compared to 4 years ago
  - Actively considered leaving Seattle
  - Optimism about the region’s future
  - Perception of safety
  - Concern about Downtown’s future
  - Likelihood to visit Downtown for activities other than work
- The Index does not include measures of local government or elected leaders.

The city should focus on bold initiatives like building more bike lanes & trails, redesigning streets to calm traffic, and installing street amenities like trees and benches.

30%

In two different questions Seattleites make it abundantly clear that they want the City to focus on the basics right now, both broadly speaking and on specifically on infrastructure investments.
Back-to-Basics Budgeting

Now I’d like to read you a set of statements. Please tell me which one is closest to your opinion.

Statement A: The city should work to offset the deficit by prioritizing government basics, supporting our city’s most vulnerable residents, and reducing non-critical spending before considering tax increases.

Statement B: The city should maintain the spending levels and programs in place today and raise new taxes to cover this estimated $230 million deficit.

Reprioritize within existing means 76%

Raise taxes to address deficit 23%

By more than a 3-to-1 margin voters say the City should work to offset the budget deficit by prioritizing basics and supporting vulnerable residents rather than by raising taxes.
